The StuCS protocols of Bochud et al. \[@B4]\ have been shown to be effective in the treatment of bacterial meningitis and should be considered in patients with cryptococcal meningitis who require antifungal therapy. Similarly, the StuCS protocols of Costalos et al. \[@B5]\ are recommended for patients with cryptococcal meningitis. According to our review of the literature, there is only one study of antifungal treatment of cryptococcal meningitis in HIV-uninfected patients with high-grade fever of unknown origin. Unlike in HIV-infected patients, in these patients the type of cryptococcal infection is CNS infection (cryptococcosis) and the predominant site of infection is the cerebrospinal fluid. This is confirmed by the high frequency of fever of unknown origin, which is not typical of bacterial meningitis \[@B2], \[@B6]\. Van Den Berg et al. \[@B7]\ described a case of cryptococcal meningitis in a patient who received a kidney transplant and developed a meningeal syndrome. However, the publication lacks detailed information about antifungal therapy. Our patient received only AmB over the course of his infection. This is consistent with the recommendations of the Spanish Group of Cryptococcal Infection \[@B8]\. It is important to highlight that a combination of AmB and FLC is significantly more effective than AmB alone \[@B9], \[@B10]\. The patient showed a remarkable clinical response to initial AmB-based therapy and had a short hospital stay. The initial antifungal treatment was modified later due to unfavorable factors such as neutropenia and dyslipidemia, and the patient's clinical response was
