It's time to get your Mac keyboard to type for you. Open Keymacro, drag and drop your keys into the window and Mac's predictive text engine will learn what you want to type. Just type it and watch your mac type it for you. Keyboard Shortcuts If you've ever looked at a stopwatch, you've probably noticed the hourly and minute marks on the display. If you're wondering where these small dots come from, this short video will explain how time markers work. Recent Comments Yahoo! has decided to send out advertisements along with its email which may have always prompted users to have a Gmail account to avoid having to deal with them. In addition to that, the company has announced that it's turning its Hotmail service into a paid one, while the current free edition will be available only to individuals who are in the United States. If you recently installed Windows 8.1, you may be encountering an issue where apps are missing from the start screen after reinstalling Windows. This particular problem is caused by a lack of the MS AppPack feature that enables the Start screen to search for apps. To resolve the situation, you can download the AppPack from Microsoft, and then proceed to put it in place.

Covalent binding of alpha-amino acids to native human proteins. Treatment of intact human erythrocytes with low concentrations of alpha-amino acid leads to a time- and concentration-dependent increase in the number of intramolecularly bound amino acid residues, as measured by the incorporation of [3H]valine and [3H]lysine into erythrocyte proteins. The efficiency of the modification reaction depends on the identity of the alpha-amino acid. Lysine is not metabolized within the cell, and one of the lysine residues of human hemoglobin is covalently modified, whereas arginine and histidine are apparently converted to their hydroxy derivatives, but are not incorporated into the proteins. It is proposed that the modification of free amino acids is an additional mode of protein synthesis.

Shutdowner is a lightweight Yahoo! widget built specifically for helping you shut down, restart, or lock your computer, or send it to hibernation mode. It comes in handy for all users who didn't get acquainted to working with the Windows 8 operating system and need to bring back the basic shutdown functionality to their desktop. The gadget sports a clean and simplistic layout that allows you to select the action that you want to trigger. When it comes to configuration settings, you are allowed to activate a countdown timer by specifying the time in hours, minutes, and seconds, change the colors for the background, cancelling tab, and info bar, play sound notifications, as well as enable the docking mode. Other options offered by the Yahoo! environment give you the possibility to prevent the windows from being dragged, set the opacity level, and ignore mouse events. You can also make the gadget stay on top of other applications, and this proves to be pretty useful, especially when dealing with multiple tools at the same time. What's more, you can hide or close the widget, and move it to any area of the screen. Since it doesn't require much computer knowledge to set up the dedicated parameters, even rookies can master the entire process with minimum effort. During our testing we have noticed that Shutdowner carries out a task quickly. As it would be expected from such a small utility, it remains light on system resources, so it doesn't burden the overall performance of the computer, nor interfere with other programs' functionality. Q: Raster Calculator running it twice returns different results I'm working on a couple of rasters and I'm trying to use Raster Calculator to check whether or not certain cells (Cells A4:A6) are the same. I have cells filled with either 0 or 1. They're called "Area_1" and "Area_2". The raster is called "Rasters". When I use Raster Calculator and type in: `if(Area_1 Area_2)` It works, but when I run it twice it will return "false" even though they are different. However, the following will return the correct "True". `if(Area_1`
