Because the driver can feel an impact when he is standing (but not in car) in the same way in which his heart beats.The next time I will look for an accident will be when the car is driving. And I will look for it, because I cannot feel my heart beat. The problem is not just this one case but the entire field of human-vehicle interaction safety from the beginning of history. A car passes by me and I feel the acceleration. I feel the deceleration, the turning, the turning right, and so on. However if a car passed me and I felt the acceleration, I would run into it, because I would also feel the deceleration, the turning, the turning right, and so on. I think that with a hierarchical analysis of human-vehicle interaction safety, the same reasoning applies and people have to be specially trained or protected when they come close to a car that starts. The US National Highway Traffic Safety Administration (NHTSA) comes up with all kind of "recommendations" to protect us against the terrifying threat of a car starting. Their recommendation is to give the driver a "distance to start" parameter of 5.6 ft. However if they realize that a car is starting, they feel a sort of "de-acceleration" and they feel the start and stop as well as the braking and acceleration, their "distance to start" parameter increases to 15.6 ft. If they discover that a car is stopping, they know that it is decelerating, braking, and accelerating. They feel the start and stop as well as the breaking and acceleration and deceleration, and their "distance to stop" parameter increases to 17.3 ft. And if I find myself in a situation where a car is accelerating at 5 km/h from me, and we have to 09e8f5149f

Lars Lykke Rasmussen (4 February 1881 – 24 February 1963) was a Danish lawyer and politician who served as Prime Minister of Denmark from 1935 to 1939. He was the son of Berthel Lykke Rasmussen, a lawyer and politician who had been the Prime Minister of Denmark in 1890. After a career as a civil servant, he was brought into the cabinet of Christian X on 20 February 1925, as Minister for Trade and Social Affairs. He was the only Prime Minister in Danish history who was not a member of parliament, since he was ineligible for election in the 1931 parliamentary election. He resigned in September 1935. He became a member of the resistance movement in the mid-1930s, when he opposed the planned German invasion of Denmark and gave a speech in the Danish Radio discussing the weakness of the Danish kingdom. Biography Lars Lykke Rasmussen was the son of Berthel Lykke Rasmussen, a lawyer and politician who had been the Prime Minister of Denmark in 1890. After completing preparatory studies at the University of Copenhagen, he graduated in 1903. He passed the Civil Service Examination and began to work for the Ministry of Finance, initially at the Customs Office in Copenhagen. In 1911, he became secretary for the Ministry's Ecclesiastical Affairs. He was the first Danish man to receive the title doctor of law. After three years as a lawyer, he was appointed to the
