Chondroitin sulfate glycosaminoglycans (GAGs) are present in large quantities in cartilage and on many cell surfaces. During regeneration, a dense accumulation of GAGs is observed at the amputation plane and a massive accumulation occurs in the regenerate, with two peaks corresponding to the early and late blastemal stages. The regenerating limbs were collected at different time intervals and the GAGs were isolated from tissue, cultured cells and the extracellular matrix. A rapid recovery of GAGs was seen in the tissue and the cultured cells, whereas the GAGs in the extracellular matrix remained low, even when the regenerated tissues showed a large degree of development. The amounts of GAGs recovered from the cultured cells and tissue were not affected by the addition of fetal calf serum (FCS), indicating that the presence of FCS did not influence the recovery of GAGs. The GAGs isolated from the regenerating tissue were analyzed by agarose gel electrophoresis, paper chromatography and a precipitation assay. The patterns of GAGs were similar to those of the intact limb but the precipitated amounts of hyaluronic acid (HA) were increased. This increase in HA was confirmed by sodium dodecyl sulfate (SDS)-polyacrylamide gel electrophoresis
