I'm looking to use PHP to search a database for any string that the user inputs. Is it best to concatenate the user's input with another string and then search on that one, or is there a more efficient way of doing it? A: For this purpose, the SQL LIKE function is probably the simplest way. It was originally intended for finding similar texts. It is very simple, and it is often sufficient for finding a text in a database. In order to get the performance right, it is essential to use the right indexing on your data. If you index the field you are searching on, the system will only have to find all of the records matching that particular value of the field. If you index the value of the field (e.g. concatenating the input text with a delimiter), then you will get better performance as you will only have to scan a subset of the records that are true for your search. I have heard of cases where LIKE is very slow on really large databases. However, in those cases, as well as in my own personal experience, it is far more effective to use one of the several SQL full-text searching functions or trigger to actually do the search. A: I would usually prefix it with * (or some prefix that is unlikely to occur in the data) for a quick search. Something like

Instagram Vineshia Facebook July 10, 2016 Share Share June 30, 2016 It's been an adventure...and a pleasure! So I've been on a holiday from blogging, from way of thinking, from the world of organic and natural beauty for quite some time now. I've spent most of my downtime catching up on television, watching Queer Eye and cooking new recipes with my mom. I haven't had the urge to purchase anything besides groceries for nearly two months. It's been incredibly liberating. But now it's time to get back to business. One of the best things to come out of this period of time is a lot of things actually moved in my life! I started therapy and began working towards a career change which is an entirely new beast for me. I had been on the verge of quitting my day job and started actively exploring that possibility this week. In my previous career I was in a restaurant for over a decade, I'd worked as a teacher for years, and I'd always been a lover of fashion and makeup. But I never actually had any sort of career as a personal stylist and makeup artist in all of those jobs. I think I've always been intimidated by the idea of it, and so had put it off. So I started researching the community. But there wasn't a community at the time, there were more people interested in competing and killing one another in a quest for some sort of self-worth. I was more into being a personal stylist than trying to be a coach. But it was hard to find anyone who understood the balance that I was seeking. I was supposed to be an artist, a stylist, and a personal shopper. But no one seemed to have any clue about how to integrate those functions together. And since I'm a natural born connector, I've had a

Statin use is independently associated with improved survival and reduced risk of non-tumor sepsis in patients with colorectal cancer. Colorectal cancer (CRC) patients are at high risk of infection. Statins are reported to exert anti-inflammatory properties and to reduce the incidence of infections. However, little is known about the possible effect of statins on cancer-related mortality in CRC patients. We analyzed data of 3,097 consecutive colorectal cancer patients treated at our institution between January 2004 and December 2005. Patients were stratified according to statin therapy (no, yes). Mortality and infection events were obtained from hospital records, death certificates, and electronic medical files. A total of 263 of 3,097 (8.3%) patients received statins. Patients receiving statins had significantly lower median age (63 vs. 65 years, $p = 0.002$) and had more often received adjuvant treatment (69.2% vs. 58.2%, p
