Think about it: we can surf the Web, play games, chat on IM, write a book, or play our favorite tunes. Now in this day and age, there are many different kinds of web browsers that can be used to browse the Web. Let's take a look at each of the major ones. Internet Explorer You can think of Internet Explorer as one of the early pioneers of the Web. It's kind of like an old dog who has plenty of tricks but no hips. Because it's so old, Internet Explorer doesn't have a lot of competition. If you want to be one of the first in your school to surf the Net, you'll need to have Internet Explorer. There are many reasons to choose it: It's one of the most widely used browsers today - making it the most-used browser on the Web. It's free. It's portable, unlike Netscape. It's also quite large and heavy, although you'll probably want to carry it around with you. (I usually keep my laptop in my backpack, and if I have to carry it, I have a briefcase and a messenger bag.) The more recent versions of Internet Explorer are quite stable. (This is a good thing.) The latest version is Internet Explorer 5, which you can download for free. You can find many directions on how to download and install this, but I'll do a bit of a walk-through to show you how to do it. First, you'll want to go to your System Control Panel. This is an icon that looks like the right side of a computer. It will be in the Control Panel folder. In Windows 95, it's under Start, then Control Panel. In Windows NT, it's in the Accessories folder. Press ALT and R to get to the

What's new in Arkady Survive:

Frank the Miner or Frank the Miner of the IronMines is a series of mystery tales written by Gordon Kent and published in May 1906, by Rich & Cowan. The puzzle/crime stories are set entirely in the mining town of Alacoa, and often feature the less-than-principled Chris Brady as the main character. Characters The Frank the Miner series, of which 100 issues were published, a few in color, begins with the introduction of Chris Brady, a man of 30 who had spent ten years in the mining camp of Alacoa as a model tenor in the twin night-clubs of the camp. The series ended in June 1908, and a new series, Nemo the Detective, began in August 1914. Fictional biography In the stories, Brady had been born in New York City to Mary Brady, a socially prominent woman whose parents were Irish. Mary had suffered a nervous breakdown, and Brady, her only child, had been taken from her and then had been raised by Mary's work-loving, non-churchgoing relatives in Boston. Brady had attended private schools and had been trained as a mining engineer. When he had decided that it was not in him to become one of the successful and upright professional mine workers, he had come to Alacoa to take part in a campaign to bring the mines of the region under union control. As a result of his efforts, he had become a town patriot. With a steady wage income from his work in the mines and a part of the pay for his dramatic ability, as well as the influence obtained as a leader in the Labor Movement, he had become an important person in the new town and knew it all very well. But naturally he felt that he knew more than most everyone else. He had remained faithful to his low-churching relatives, who had been horrified that he had married a "Snipe," a woman who went to such a club as the New Ledger or the Red Barn. He had worked himself up to the chairmanship of the Young Men's Christian Association, and through sheer hard work and dedication had won the respect and loyalty of practically everybody. To carry out a certain plan which he had laid, and which was the problem at the heart of the Alacoa mysteries, it was necessary for him to win the confidence of the woman he was using. He had become well acquainted with "Frances," whom he had met
