Pirates of Everseas: Thank you for the comment Your comment has been removedShrinkage or rupture of an aneurysm is one of the most serious consequences of cerebral aneurysms. During rupture, blood is not only occluded in a space from which it normally flows, but is also pressurized, or elevated, by the expansion of the surrounding aneurysmal sack due to the loss of the elasticity of the sack wall. As a result, the rupture of aneurysms is often accompanied by a high morbidity rate. There are three basic treatments for aneurysms: surgical excision, occlusion, and endovascular occlusion. The most common aneurysmal operation is surgical excision of an aneurysm, although this operation is performed very few times today because of its considerable risks. Occlusion of an aneurysm by means of embolization is the most commonly used form of treatment for cerebral aneurysms today. This technique is highly effective, but its minimally invasive nature makes its use very debatable. In the treatment of aneurysms by endovascular occlusion techniques, a catheter is introduced into a bloodstream of an aneurysm to a location at which the wall of an aneurysm is located and the inner surface of an aneurysmal sack is embolized by filling a space inside the sack with liquid emb

BLARPI is a physics-based game built for the HTC Vive with rooms that can be individually tailored. By leveraging the full capabilities of the room-scale HTC Vive you can interact with your environment in ways you couldn't with any other platform! It's designed for the entire family, providing an entertaining way to exercise your body and mind at home, school, or at the gym. In our first form we created a cross between Tennis and Ping-Pong. While it's a competitive game by nature, it's also very much an exploration game, so it can be played through with a buddy or a group of friends. In order to go from one location to another, you have to take a stance, swing your racket, and hit the ball toward the floor. It's easy, it's fun, and it's also very clean on the physics front. Like any game, we plan to evolve it, expand it, and will include features like a score based system and local multiplayer. We also do intend to engage the community and have a focus on making it a community-driven game. Kleiner Perkins: Creating Value Value Creation is the Basis for Profits The process of creating value can be divided into two phases: The Discovery and Development phases. Once the discovery is made-and this can be anything from a new strategic paradigm to an idea for a new product/service, the discovery needs to be rendered as a patentable item. The creation process is based on processes that have been perfected over thousands of years. Each inventor had to get a patent to allow them to exploit their own process. The first inventor without rights to a patent published his work for free to the public, a common development process for centuries. That doesn't mean that the first inventor lacked a strategy, but his strategy was purely based on development procedures. Since the creation of the first electronic devices and the home computer in the early 1970's, "strategies" of two types had emerged: Most strategy consultants recognize two categories: 1) Competitive Intelligence - which involves locating the best source of information that will enable you to recognize opportunities, danger, and market forces with your competitors. Some companies do this using a competitive intelligence team or even by hiring other companies to perform the function. This is the most difficult idea to understand. After all, identifying a competitive threat is hard enough to do, why should someone else do it for you, especially if the information that you have is just as valuable. On the other hand, the strength of an idea is unlikely to succeed in the face of aggressive competitors. In most cases, this is considered a risky activity since being identified as a potential competitor can destroy the life of the strategy consultant, or undermine support for a concept. The reason for this is that most strategy consultants base their strategies on a business model. This means that the consultants often have multiple projects going on at the same time, and they are often very jumbled, or containing problems. They have to justify to their employees (who have a fiduciary responsibility to their shareholders to deliver profits) the need to work on a relatively small number of projects instead of working on or starting more projects. Often the justification is, "If we work on many projects, we should be quite sure that one of them will succeed before we divert our resources to it." Why should one risk a business, especially since some projects are easier to develop than others? I can hear objections already, since most people consider strategic consultants to be in a unique position in relation to Metachromium is an app browser for VR that opens any WebXR page as a spatial overlay app that runs on top of any other VR game. Metachromium has the following features: 1. Runs on top of any VR game 2. Easy to install and run 3. WebXR compatible 4. Built on top of Chromium 5. Works on Mac, Windows, and Linux 6. Visual Studio 2017 support This will help you get started with webXR: This video shows one of the main uses of the Chrome web browser, to be able to develop HTML5 web applications for the Web. It shows a small application that is one HTML file. This file can be opened in a separate web browser and runs with an open WebGL-based browser. It can run on a smartphone, tablet, and desktop PC. If you have a PWA (Progressive Web App), you are able to configure the open web browser to always be in a browser mode. This makes it possible to have the Web-based application run without a browser. This is one of the main characteristics of a PWA. The video also shows how to create a PWA yourself. (if you have a Pro account, you can access this advanced video from here: This video shows how to develop an application using the Firefox web browser. It shows a small web-based application that is one HTML file. It can run on any web browser. You can package the application with the Firefox WebExtension. You can test the application through an extension with a developer profile. You can also test the application locally by running with Node.js, or with the extension WebIDE. You can also test the application through the runtime by running with web-based runtimes. It is possible to debug the application locally through Firefox Developer Edition. You can also use Firefox Developer Edition to connect to real devices over the Web. You can create a Progressive Web App using Firefox Developer Edition, and deploy the app to Firefox.
