use site: Fibroblasts synthesize TGF-beta 2 in vitro and in vivo following wounding and TGF-beta 1 treatment. One of the most important effects attributed to transforming growth factor-beta (TGF-beta) is its potent inhibitory effect on fibroblast proliferation. Here, in a rat model of deep dermal wounding, we established that TGF-beta 2 was synthesized in vivo and in vitro by the fibroblasts that populated the wounds. In the wounded skin, the levels of TGF-beta 2 and immunoreactive protein as well as the physiological responses of wounded skin to TGF-beta 1, are increased. TGF-beta 1 treatment in vivo markedly reduced the rate of wound healing, increased the number of dermal fibroblast-like cells and decreased the number of alpha-actin positive myofibroblasts. After day 10 of wound healing, alpha-actin positive myofibroblasts increased slightly but not significantly. The numbers of dermal fibroblast-like cells continuously decreased. Neither day 10 nor 14 of wounding alone significantly changed the levels of TGF-beta 1 and TGF-
