Software Naming Conventions Graphic design programs don't commonly offer standardized ways of naming files. Instead, designers generally assign a unique name to a file to indicate that it has undergone some type of image transformation. In Photoshop, filenames usually include the following elements:

- * _Example: `Example.jpg`
- * _Software-specific name: `Example_Original.jpg`
- * _Filename with additional metadata: `Example_Original.jpg_The_purpose_of_this_file_is_to_test_pixel_methologies.jpg`
- * _Binary format: `Example_Original.jpg.psd`

Filenames with additional metadata often include the following elements:

- * _Example: `Example.jpg`
- * _Software-specific name: `Example_Original.jpg`
- * _Filename with additional metadata: `Example_Original.jpg_This_is_the_name_of_a_clip_art.jpg`
- * _Binary format: `Example_Original.jpg.psd`

These elements are used for many purposes. You can use them to assist with searching databases, for example, by suffixing an image with `_.jpg_` (for a digital image) or with `_.tif_` (for an image in a Tagged Image File Format) or with `_.tiff_`.

Story highlights There's no good explanation yet for the photos, NASA says The images show the Moon dead center in the Earth-Sun Lagrange Point 2 Photos taken three days before lunar eclipse Photos shared on NASA's website show the Moon dead center in the Earth-Sun Lagrange Point 2 (L2), where it was the closest Earth will be to the Sun on August 3. NASA released the photos on Wednesday, a few days before the Monday, August 3 lunar eclipse, and provided no explanation for the strange images. "This is a very rare event and is not expected to occur again for at least a century," NASA said on its website. "As it passes over Earth, the Moon will be extremely close to the center of Earth's shadow." "The apparent position of the Earth in the sky can fool the eye into thinking that the Moon is closer than it really is," NASA said. "Using a technique called lunar positioning, the team was able to identify that the Earth was far away from the Moon and there was no natural explanation for why the Moon looked the way it did." The Lunar Reconnaissance Orbiter snapped the photos, and the site says it's got no good explanation yet for why it was taken that way. "Nothing in our measurements explains where the Moon appears to be in this way," NASA wrote, "but we are working on a plausible explanation."

What's New In?

Several of President Donald Trump's former aides have been indicted in connection with the special counsel's Russia investigation. But a Republican congressman is urging Attorney General William Barr to bring a criminal case against the individuals and the Obama administration. "Since Donald Trump's presidency has been dominated by the coordination between the Obama administration and Russian government [we have] important questions that need to be asked," Rep. Randy Weber, R-Texas, said in a column in the Hill newspaper. "If the Obama administration engaged in illegal collusion with the Russian government, there should be consequences," he said. The Department of Justice is currently investigating whether Obama's administration improperly spied on Trump's campaign during the 2016 election. The House Intelligence Committee has also been briefed on the findings in the special counsel investigation into alleged connections between Russia and Trump's 2016 campaign. Weber, a member of the committee and a former FBI agent, has been a vocal critic of House Intelligence Committee Chairman Rep. Devin Nunes and his top staff members, which includes a top staffer on the House Judiciary Committee. Nunes earlier this year issued a secret memo alleging wrongdoing at the FBI and the Justice Department that is being used by Republicans to undercut Robert Mueller's Russia investigation. The Obama administration has denied that it improperly spied on the Trump campaign, saying that its counterintelligence investigation into foreign influence on the election was conducted legally. The intelligence committee is currently investigating the allegations, and Weber appeared to be making a general statement about Obama's actions when he said that if the Obama administration committed a crime during the 2016 election, "there should be consequences." So far, the committee has interviewed only Trump's former campaign chairman Paul Manafort, who was indicted in late October by a Virginia grand jury. Nunes has spent months blocking the Democrats from questioning a key witness in the counterintelligence investigation, Carter Page. "It is time for Capitol Hill to ask the hard questions about the Obama administration's foreign policy and the many ways in which Obama's administration was illegally spying on Donald Trump and his campaign," Weber said.
