Molecular Cell Biology, 6th edition, Harvey Lodish et al.,Â .This invention relates generally to the field of basketball goals. More specifically, the invention relates to a basketball goal assembly where the ball return assembly includes a collapsible collar for maintaining the ball during ball retrieval. In the past, a variety of basketball goals have been designed with various ball return apparatus. One example of this can be seen in U.S. Pat. No. 3,350,449 where a standard backboard is used, but the ball returns are contained in a cylindrical housing located at a certain height above the backboard. In that design, when the goal assembly is not in use, the ball return assembly can be removed from the support structure and stored, and the backboard can be used without any appreciable loss of ball containment. When the goal assembly is in use, the ball returns are used to maintain the ball in position. Other conventional basketball goals with support structures having assemblies for returning the ball are known. For example, it is known to provide a collapsible ball return apparatus which can be made out of flexible material as seen in U.S. Pat. Nos. 3,204,038; 3,675,688; and 3,719,818. The collapsible ball return apparatus employed in those designs is generally located between the backboard and the net. In the past, most basketball goals have incorporated a goal frame or support structure to which is attached a substantially flat backboard. It is known to use curved backboards as shown in U.S. Pat. No. 3,967,734 and in U.S. Pat. No. 4,809,982. In the '734 patent, the backboard is a portion of a generally U-shaped member having curved upper and lower portions. In the '982 patent, the backboard is a generally planar member having curved upper and lower portions. While the conventional basketball goals are usually satisfactory for basic purposes, it is desirable to provide a basketball goal which is of a lighter construction. As such, it is desirable to provide a basketball goal which is of such light construction that it may be easily handled and transported. It is also desirable to provide a basketball goal which includes a ball return assembly which is collapsible during transport or for convenient storage and which assembly is storable in such

Q: Very basic example of a transformational grammar I'm trying to create a very simple language in transformational grammar. My grammar looks like this: start → S S → aS | bS a → aa | b b → cb c → aaa I'm trying to program this so that it actually works, and want to know if there's anything wrong with my grammar. A: This cannot be parsed with a context-free grammar, because it contains the right-recursive rule S → aS | bS. This rule is not permitted for CF grammars. Any grammar that allows one of the recursive rules S → aS | bS must be either (semi-)LR or context-sensitive. Your grammar, however, allows either a rule S → aS or a rule S → bS, but not both. [Screening of cystic fibrosis in Argentina. Spanish translation of the Human Screening Initiative for the Study of Cystic Fibrosis (HSISC) protocol]. Human screening is a diagnostic procedure used in conjunction with cystic fibrosis (CF) newborn screening to identify children at risk of having this disease. The standard methodology used for screening involves mass pancreatic suction, a complete physical and evaluation of the child and the family, as well as a restricted sweat test. The series of data obtained from each screening is incorporated into a CF registry database. Our aim was to
