UPDATE:The last update was released on Sept. 13th and the development has been paused.A standard quill on a feather quill pen has a cylindrical central shaft, to which the feathers of a pen are attached. On a cap or plug formed of translucent plastic or glass or metal, the quill is disposed axially parallel to the cap or plug, and the cap or plug is fitted over the central shaft and into the pen. In the case of a metal plug, a thread is formed at the end of the shaft, and the plastic cap or plug is locked on by screwing the cap or plug onto the shaft. In the case of the metal plug, the feather quill is pre-cut at predetermined positions, so that the feathers of the pen are aligned with the axial axis of the plug. The quill of a standard feather pen also has a foot that is at the end opposite the central shaft or cap. The foot is usually made to have a polygonal configuration, to fit an opening in a matching shape in a transparent cap or plug. The transparent cap or plug is shaped in a complementary way to the foot, so that when the cap or plug is fitted to the foot, it holds the cap or plug in place against the foot. The standard feather quill has not been satisfactory, because if the cap or plug is made of glass or plastic, a fraction of the light from the daylight is reflected and this makes the pen appear dirty, so that the cap or plug must be frequently cleaned. If the cap or plug is made of metal, the cap or plug has an unpleasant appearance.The present invention relates to computer memory systems, and more particularly, to methods and apparatus for reducing the latency of a read operation in a memory system. In certain computer systems, a host processor may perform a read operation to read data from a memory. In a multiple memory system, the time to complete the read operation may be unacceptably long. The time to complete the read operation in the multiple memory system may be the sum of the response times of each memory in the multiple memory system. The host processor and the memory system may be aware of the response time of each memory. Each memory system may have a maximum number of outstanding read requests. The host processor may attempt to reduce the latency of the read operation by reducing the maximum number of outstanding read requests. If the maximum number of outstanding read requests is reduced, then the latency of the read operation may be reduced.
