Eldon Ring Review :

Tue, 24 Jan 2011 11:42:24 GMT Ring2011-01-24T11:42:24ZDave RombolaDave RombolatoInstalldownloadwarecrack>A double-blind placebo-controlled study of MS-637 in the acute treatment of cocaine and amphetamine craving in cocaine addicts: effect on mood and subjectively-based measures of drug craving. The effects of the n-carbamoyl-1-(3-trifluoromethylphenyl)-3-piperidinyl)-pyrrolidin-2-one (MS-637) were evaluated in a randomized, double-blind, placebo-controlled, crossover trial of 15 cocaine-dependent patients. Subjects completed two 60-minute laboratory sessions, separated by a 2-day interval. On each laboratory day, subjects were given two doses of 4 capsules containing either placebo or 25 mg of MS-637 or 100 mg of placebo or 40 mg of MS-637, spaced evenly over one hour. Subjective, self-administration, and psychophysiological (reactivity) measures were collected throughout the study, and craving was measured on the last 10 minutes of each session. A significant drug ($p = .03$) by drug dose (p less than .03) interaction was found, with active treatment producing a greater rate of cocaine self-administration than placebo in the range of 10-60 mg and 100-180 mg doses, and cocaine self-administration, after the acute withdrawal phase, was clearly associated with drug-induced euphoria ($k = 0.42$). Therapeutic value was calculated as above the placebo, but significant drug, drug dose, and drug by drug dose by time effects were found for measures of mood on the Visual Analog Scales, Drug Effects Questionnaire,
