Regards, TheStompa The present invention relates to a blank for the manufacture of clothing and in particular to a blank for the manufacture of slacks. The invention is essentially applicable to all areas of the manufacture of slacks and suits, e.g. for men and for women, and for children's clothing as well as for military trousers, for parachutes or even trousers or coats for firefighters. With present-day production methods, most of the components employed are woven flat or else, if they are assembled to form seams, they are applied in some other way. In particular in the case of slacks and suits it is often the case that the garment is finished in the form of a tube and that it is necessary to join the pieces or areas of the garment together with a machine seam. The seam is usually formed by sewing. The sewing operation is normally carried out by means of a seamstress standing or sitting in front of a sewing machine. The seam is produced so that it can function practically as a water-tight closed seam. Such a seam has the drawback that it is a complex and expensive operation to perform. Moreover, the seam, once finished, can no longer be separated from the component. Machines for the formation of machine seams have already been proposed, but it is not always possible with these to produce, given the size and/or weight of the component, a seam that is sufficiently water-tight and sufficiently functional. The object of the present invention is therefore to remedy this state of affairs by providing a blank which is simple and economical to make and, once formed into a component, can then be readily separated. The invention relates to a blank comprising a first strip of fabric, a second strip of fabric and a third strip of fabric, the first, second and third strips being provided with perforations, one or more of the strips being provided with pre-perforations, the perforations in a first strip being offset relative to the perforations in the second strip, the perforations in a third strip being offset relative to the perforations in the first strip, the first and second strips being joined together, and the
