For example, a military person may need to leave an area in a military vehicle as quickly as possible, while also making sure to check that the area is clear of any obstacles such as landmines or other explosive materials. Further, it is often difficult to rapidly identify all parts of a room or any other objects or items in an area, especially when the person must make sense of the area rapidly. Existing evacuation methods may include pedestrians running out of a building, soldiers advancing down an evacuation route, and vehicles moving in an orderly fashion. These existing methods are not very effective and may cause damage to surroundings and even death. For example, soldiers may inadvertently step on a landmine and cause a blast, or may break windows and cause undue damage to the surroundings. Further, the use of an evacuation route is subject to many undesirable conditions, such as traffic, weather and the like. Although U.S. Pat. No. 7,149,075 discloses an automatic target seeker system that is adapted for operation with a truck and that provides an enhanced ability to track objects in a manner which substantially reduces side-to-side tracking errors, this system may require a time consuming calibration process that is based on using a target simulator. It will be appreciated that for simplicity and clarity of illustration, elements shown in the figures have not necessarily been drawn to scale. For
