painted skin is based on one of pu songlings classic short stories in strange stories from a chinese studio. zhou xun stars as xiao wei, a fox spirit that feasts on human hearts in order to maintain her lovely, youthful appearance. when general wang sheng (chen kun) rescues her from a band of bandits and brings her home, trouble brews as the demon falls in love with the general. the design of the science museum at oxford was devised by the architect sir john burnet and largely based on the writings of the oxford philosopher john ruskin. ruskin argued that the way we make things is as important as the objects themselves, and that science and industry should also seek to reflect the hand of the craftsman. this is reflected in the inclusion of the hand-carved flowers and plants that adorn the museum. despite ruskin's philosophy, the science museum is actually a modern structure that draws on traditional architectural elements. the museum itself is modelled on an early gothic cathedral, and the exterior is clad with long flights of stone steps. inside, the main entrance leads visitors to a vast courtyard that is dominated by a pair of large metal hands, a symbol of the museum's role in science. this is a fan translation. i take no credit for this. if you like this translation, please support the original. you can download this translation in english by clicking the link. if you want to translate it into your native language, please feel free to do so! it is an animation based on the popular chinese web comic painted skin by zou in which it is not described in any
