I've done photographs of everything for my photography, from the animal world to portraits to landscape to myself. But I've always struggled to edit my photos, especially in the darkroom. By far, the best adaptive-lens camera is the iPhone 7 Plus. The quality of the photos taken with that two-cam setup is phenomenal, better even than the camera prosumer lenses. So why did my 16-year-old self (that's me in the blue shirt and flip flops on the left) get excited about using Adobe Photoshop Elements and then start whipping out a camera? I was in love with photography because I was learning about light and how color and contrast affect our experience when we look at the world. I wanted to figure out how to re-imagine light and color and make it come alive on these photos.
