It was drawn up, and the cord cut, after which there was an interval of about three seconds. After this, he spoke, looked around him and then bent his head, as if he were receiving a blow. The second examination was made under similar circumstances, and when the fourth was made the boy was dead. The person who did this seems to be one of the actors in the case. For several days after the examination the boy lay on the table, dead, without feeling, breathing or motion, and on the table beside him was the cord, twisted and knotted, and the coverlid neatly buttoned. On Monday, two or three days after the examination, the boy's father had a talk with him, as the boy sat on the sofa and listened, in which he said to him, "Edmund, I have something to say to you;" "I have been thinking," he continued, "that I ought to tell you something before you do anything; and, Edmund, I have taken such a terrible blow that I could not speak to you before, because I did not feel I could bear it. I have thought, Edmund, about your mother, and I believe that I have not done right by her. That is what I want to say to you, Edmund." This little conversation was overheard by a neighbor, and she wrote it down, as it was dictated to her by the father. On Thursday morning the boy, being asked if he had anything to say, made his little confession that he had been "sent to by the doctor," and said that he "did not think it was right for him to die." This confession was witnessed by several neighbors, and made into a statement signed by him and his father, which was given to the father by the neighbor who witnessed it. The neighbor wrote the statement, as it was dictated to her, and she signed it. About this time, the father said that Edmund was a good boy, and that

Is a SEO researching tool that can be used to analyze URLs and see if they meet the latest SEO requirements. It's a professional application that can get hold of title tags, keywords, meta descriptions, the Robots.txt file, and canonical URLs, among others. Check your website for SEO-related issues Following a speedy setup operation where.NET Framework is required, you're welcomed by a clean and elegant interface, where you can begin by populating the task list with the URLs you want to analyze. This can be done by manually entering URLs in a list (one per line), pasting the current Clipboard contents, loading a plain text document with the links, loading the content from an XML Sitemap, or by opening a project from Netpeak Spider, a SEO crawling tool made by the same developer. Analyze scan results and save the table to file Once the analysis is over, you can view scan results to find out the number of internal, external and outgoing links of each URL, along with the title, description, H1 header, character count, whether Robots.txt instructions exist, metarobots instructions, canonical URL, content size, and status code. The table can be exported to Excel (.xlsx format) after picking the columns with the information you're interested in. Configure search settings to include only info you're interested in However, you can configure a wide range of parameters before scanning the website. This concerns on-page events (like favorite icon, internal and external links, number of titles, title word count, number of h1 and h2-h6 headers, canonical HTTP header), server (IP, country, region), Whois (domain age, creation and expiration date), Alexa (global and local rank, sites linking), social networks (like Facebook shares, likes, comments and clicks, tweets), and others. Custom filters can be also applied to include or exclude specific URLs by taking into account the rules you define.
