Having not seen much of the city yet, I decided to check out some of the museums that are a bit off the beaten path and not in the list of tourist destinations. I decided to take a cab, because parking is a huge problem here. The cab driver was pretty nice and helpful, and the cab fare was very reasonable. Washington, DC has a large number of museums and the Smithsonian Institute is very well known. The Smithsonian is an independent research institution and the museum and research center in Washington, DC houses more than 2.5 million objects in its collections. I am a big fan of the Smithsonian museums. They provide a good mix of the arts, history, natural history, science, and technology. Although I was looking for a cultural experience, I really didn't want to spend a lot of money, so I went to the National Air and Space Museum. This is basically the "big" science museum and it is enormous.

They had pretty much everything there, including the moon rocks, a moon buggy, a shuttle orbiter, and a "control panel" from a space shuttle. Other things that I liked were the famous "Star Trails"
