I guess I will be downloading it again and this time make sure I do export to JPG first because the new file can not work as a Photoshop file. Hopefully it is a bug and not a software total failure. Anyway thanks again for all the great information. I am sure it will be a great gift for this Christmas! Well, if you are using the Grid option, you would have to adjust that to take advantage of the feature. However, it won't make a huge difference for the borderless version of course. You might want to also consider enabling the New Menu Option, which you can find in the Window Menu. Also, keep in mind that the adjustment categories will be accessible no matter what selection mode you are in when you export. So if you prefer using the Album option, you can simply adjust the exported settings accordingly. Check out the blog post by the author of Export Settings Sets. You can move the sliders to save some time on exporting if you need to. Personally, I almost always create a PSD or PDF version of my images in advance, but that doesn't work in all cases. Just keep track of settings of your exported PDFs and exported PSDs and they will be accessible in Lightroom regardless of how you export.
