The reference cited by the Commission, contains a proposal to increase this threshold to 30 mg.alpha.-LA/kg. This proposal was rejected in the discussion in Bailleul-Le-Petit. Bailleul-Le-Petit was prompted by a request for Authorisation at Community level from a European brewer who was following the traditional method of Dierickx of verifying the 1.5% lactic acid content of raw material used for the brewing process. In this case a reduction of 0.5 mg.alpha.-LA/kg was envisaged. This reduction was rejected in the discussion, leading to a reference limit of 20 mg.alpha.-LA/kg. In view of the fact that a higher value of 20 mg.alpha.-LA/kg would have created an enormous cost burden for the brewer, it was proposed to replace the legislation with a sample testing strategy which was believed to be of the same reliability as the EEC lactic acid test. In this case, the brewer is entitled to a refund of the sample cost if the content of lactic acid is below 10 mg.alpha.-LA/kg. This strategy has major drawbacks. Firstly, it requires the brewer to carry out tests on a large number of samples. The potential cost is clearly considerable. To clarify the situation, the Commission has requested the Member States to provide financial support for this strategy, which is estimated to cost about ECU 300,000. However, because of the unique nature of beer production, the brewing process and its products, a programme has been prepared which sets out to use a completely different approach to that proposed for beer. With regard to
